Spring newsletter

Written with cssMode set to standard.

Drop cap

The red capital is 30pt with line-height: 1. Standard: the first line is 30pt high, so the blue background fits snugly over the capital. Legacy: the first line is as high as the capital's normal line, leaving a gap below it.

Welcome to the spring issue. This season we look at gardens, a new delivery service, and the results of the reader survey, which drew more replies than ever.

Footnote marks

The green footnote marks are raised, with line-height: 0 so that they do not push the lines apart. Standard: the two lines of the paragraph are as far apart as the two lines after it. Legacy: the first line, which holds the marks, is taller.

Survey replies rose by a third[1] on last year, and most readers[2] asked for more recipes and fewer onions. The full figures are on the website, with the method used.
Thank you to everyone who took part.

Badges and a pull quote

The dark badges have line-height: 1, below the paragraph's, so the lines holding them are no taller in either mode. The green quote has line-height: 2. Standard: its line is twice its 13pt font, 26pt high. Legacy: it is as high as the quote's normal line.

Filed under GARDENS and SURVEY. One reader wrote: "the best issue yet", and we hope you agree.

Plans

Each price is 16pt with line-height: 1.1. Standard: each item is 17.6pt high, so the list is tighter. Legacy: each item is the price's normal line height.

- $9 a month for the weekly box
- $15 a month with fruit
- $24 a month for a family

Your order

The quantities are 14pt with line-height: 12mm. Standard: each row with a quantity is 12mm plus its padding high, and the nested table of options sits in a taller row. Legacy: the rows are only as high as the 14pt text. The note under the table has line-height: 2 on its span, making its first line taller in standard mode only.

Item	Options	Qty
