Table backgrounds

Each pair below is the same colour written twice. The second of each pair has a table with no background of its own in front of it, which used to leave the pair's second half painted on top of itself and so darker than the first.

Translucent red, with nothing in front of it

A table with no background of its own

Translucent red again, and the same shade as the first

Another table with no background of its own

Translucent blue, one table with no background behind it

A third table with no background of its own

A translucent cell rather than a translucent table

The dashed block below is kept together and does not fit on this page, so it moves whole to the next. Its red table used to leave its background behind at the foot of this page, where the table in front of it had left a place for backgrounds to land.

The blue table below is not kept together and breaks across the page; each part is painted once, the same shade.
