Cursive joining

A letter of a cursive script takes its form from the letters either side of it, so a character read as joining on the wrong side is drawn correctly itself and misshapes its neighbour. Every sample runs right to left; read the letter on the right of each, and compare it with the two samples under it.

Syriac: Beth before Sogdian Fe

Beth, Sogdian Fe - initial Beth

A cursive Syriac letter 'Beth' (ܒ) written in a style that anticipates the following Sogdian 'Fe' (𐭥). The 'Beth' is written as a simple horizontal stroke with a small hook at the end, which is the form it takes when it is the initial letter of a word.

Beth, Semkath - initial Beth, the form to match

A cursive Syriac letter 'Beth' (ܒ) written in a style that matches the following Sogdian 'Semkath' (𐭥). The 'Beth' is written as a simple horizontal stroke with a small hook at the end, which is the form it takes when it is the initial letter of a word.

Beth alone - isolated Beth, the form it was given

A cursive Syriac letter 'Beth' (ܒ) written in its isolated form. It is a simple horizontal stroke with a small hook at the end.

Beth, Sogdian Fe, Beth - initial and final Beth
