A framework's stylesheet, with :last-child and :empty

Card list

.card-list .item:last-child against .card-list .item, as heavy and written later: a blue rule under every item but the last, which sits on the card's grey border alone. The first item is bold.

First item

Second item

Third item

A single item, bold and with no blue rule

Menus and steps

li:only-child. The menu with a single entry is green with no bullet; the entries of the menu of two are blue with bullets.

- Only entry

- First entry
- Second entry

:first-child then :last-child. The first step is green and the last red; a list with one step is red, the later rule winning.

1. Start
2. Middle
3. Finish

1. A single step

li.highlight written after li:last-child, as heavy. The highlighted last tag is orange, the later rule winning.

- First tag
- Highlighted last tag

Content from an editor

p:empty { display: none }. No blue strip between the first two paragraphs, where the editor left an empty paragraph. The paragraph holding a space, between the second and third, is not empty, as in a browser, and shows as a thin blue strip.

First paragraph.

Second paragraph.

Third paragraph.

Alert

#notice p against .alert p:last-child. Both lines are blue, the id outweighing the pseudo-class, and the last line has no space under it.

The first line of the notice.

The last line of the notice.

Table

.table tr:last-child td against .table td. A grey rule under each body row but the last, a black rule under the last header row, on this page and the next, and no rule under the total. The note spanning the row is grey and italic.
